In addition, this enzyme is involved with the fat digestion in the small intestine, and the degradation of glycogen in the liver and muscle cells, thus having an important role in the regulation of various physiological functions. Auxins, or aminoiso acids, are plant hormones. In general, auxins are produced in an amount several hundred times smaller than that of cytokinins. Auxins, in general, play an important role in the regulation of plant growth and development, for example, stimulating the elongation of plant stem, embryo, root and hypocotyl, and causing the initiation, development, and elongation of lateral root. Auxins also stimulate the growth of lateral bud, aniline, and the elongation and branching of adventitious roots. On the contrary, cytokinins, for example, have an influence on the inhibition of plant growth and development, resulting in the inhibition of auxin stimulation of lateral root and lateral bud growth. Auxins have a relation with not only growth and development but also with the repression of cork formation in roots. Auxins are substances generally produced by plants. Cytokinins are active substances generally produced by fungi and bacteria. The auxin IAA (indole-3-acetic acid) which induces a plant growth inhibitory state is one of the most important auxins. In this case, IAA enters plants through the cell membrane and combines with the specific receptors of the plant, which then transmit signals to protein kinases, and finally induce a series of biochemical reactions. In the course of the biochemical reactions, IAA-bound receptors turn off the expression of hormone biosynthetic enzymes so as to produce low levels of IAA in plant tissues. Thus, IAA inhibits the growth of plants (Plant Growth Regulator). In the prior art, auxins have been chemically synthesized or extracted from plants, and several auxins have been already d0c515b9f4

is a force of nature that we do not understand. Stopping at nothing in its campaign to purge its universities of all trace of socialism, a leading hard right think tank has launched a new "socialist history" campaign claiming that Western left-leaning scholars "were used" by communists. In March, the Heritage Foundation, a conservative Washington think tank, singled out socialists, calling their beliefs "anti-intellectual." The foundation claimed that they "are uniformly hostile to freedom and an agent of totalitarianism," and called for universities to remove their anti-war, anti-capitalism and anti-free market stance. The foundation's president, Joseph Coors, noted that "Anti-capitalism does not refer to economic doctrines, but to communist and especially totalitarian control of the economy." Even though most modern scholars of the left were not communists, who were the culprits who tricked them into thinking that the Soviet Union was a benevolent socialist state? Not surprisingly, the answer is the Ku Klux Klan, which was on the right and in a position to use its power to promote such hoaxes. Coors, in his March 2009 speech, said, "The Klan was using the intellectual influence of the radical left to inflame racial tension and anti-white bias in ways that promoted communism, and on some occasions, white supremacy. "Historians for decades have documented the odd symbiotic relationship between black civil rights activists and communist groups that openly supported them. Communist-front groups such as the Third World America's Communist Party and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) were direct rivals to the civil rights movement and vehemently opposed it. On the one hand, black civil rights leaders not only defended Soviet foreign policy but also actively defended the Soviet Union's takeover of Eastern Europe and China and denounced the United States." To discredit the
