The gig at the Trinity Centre was a rehearsal for an upcoming part of the Glasgow leg of the Daytrotter series. The centrepiece of Samir's set was an ethereal cover of Enya's "A Day Without Rain" that he and Talha had painstakingly worked up by layering his vocals with the sound of a mistreated, coming down a tinny FM radio. Samir's debut album, As I See It, is his own outstanding interpretation of experimental electronica and hip-hop, and as such, it probably doesn't do the music justice. What he does, however, is his vocals and artfully composed melody. Talha, a fellow musician and avid music-lover, is the brain behind the project. Samir Iqbal is an electronic music lover with a broad perspective of everything that is modern. "I love everything about electronic music," says the 22-year-old. "I'd just like to expand and make it more diverse."
