Glucocorticoid induction of cyclooxygenase-2 in vascular smooth muscle. A number of pro-inflammatory cytokines, including interleukin-1beta, tumor necrosis factor-alpha, and lipopolysaccharide, potently induce expression of cyclooxygenase-2 (COX-2) in vascular smooth muscle (VSM). Like interleukin-1beta, glucocorticoids increase c-fos expression in these cells and induce transcription of COX-2, but the mechanisms underlying these effects are unclear. We hypothesize that these two agents may share a common signaling pathway, such as the protein kinase activated by stress kinase (PKA) or stress activated protein kinase, that leads to activation of an intracellular mechanism necessary for transactivation of the COX-2 promoter. In testing the possibility that glucocorticoids induce COX-2 through PKA, we found a corticosteroid dexamethasone to increase PKA activity in VSM and to induce c-fos and COX-2 mRNAs, but be relatively ineffective in these regards compared with interleukin-1beta. The glucocorticoid induction of COX-2 was blocked by PKA inhibitors and by inhibition of specific tyrosine kinases, such as Src and the epidermal growth factor receptor. Interleukin-1beta induced c-fos and COX-2, but not in the glucocorticoid receptor (GR)-deficient mutant A549 cells. Glucocorticoids also blocked the induction of c-fos and COX-2 by interleukin-1beta. These findings support the hypothesis that glucocorticoids induce COX-2 expression through distinct pathways that lead to recruitment of common molecular signals to the promoter. Glucocorticoids are known to induce COX-2 in monocytes. Whether the induction of COX-2 in VSM also takes place through mechanisms similar to those defined in other cells will be the focus of further
