Show Wendy Williams has taken a page out of the Dick Clark's "American Bandstand" playbook and admitted to slapping an employee on the show and still getting paid. On "DWTS: Celebrity Edition" on Monday, Wendy Williams was justifiably fuming that she had gone to great lengths to keep her female executive producer from coming to work, and as is her wont she asked, "Can I get fired?" However, she quickly calmed down when her PR manager told her that she'd actually never given the woman a day of work at the behest of her bosses, and that the woman had received a promotion and raise. However, Williams' entire career has been built on playing the role of the terrifying disciplinarian who's quick to slap her own employees. In this case, there's only one way to win: Tell the truth. "I'm downplaying this," Williams said. "You know, I was fired twice on my own show. I had to apologize. I had to give up or quit. And it's really like, you know, I wasn't fired for having a tantrum. I wasn't fired for fighting with a staff member." "DWTS" host Erin Andrews echoed her words and asked if Williams would do the same to a male employee. Advertisement "Oh my God," she said. "Wow. It's funny because I don't even have this office. So I'm not going to answer that." [Coronary thrombolysis (author's transl)]. Coron c9d1549cdd

A solo game about a 16-year old girl trying to deal with her new life. In a world overrun by monsters, magic, and technology, where everything is connected and your actions have consequences, you are free to go anywhere, do anything, and be anything you want, as long as it benefits you. Equipped with two powerful psychic abilities, you have the ability to absorb and replicate the memories of other people and objects, transforming the memories and the objects into your own. This is also the key to your unusual and impressive form. In addition to the conventional combat abilities of telekinetic attack, and the ability to teleport, you can even gain the ability to materialize objects, bend time, and create illusions. How will you shape your adventure? Test your fingers with this simple score chasing game. The basics are simple: there is one correct tile, press the correct key corresponding to it. There are two main mods: Stamina and Speed. In Stamina mode, the goal is to never miss a tile, the game is over. Every time you correctly type the tile, you gain a second. How long can you be accurate? In Speed mode, the goal is to be fast without missing a tile. Get to a specified number of tiles and check your score. Can you beat your previous scores?

What's new in Aeon Drive Soundtrack:

Today, as we approach 100 days of captivity for me I've decided to bring you (1) channeling Beethoven's Fur Elise on repeat in vain, (2) a calming botanical drink recipe that's supposed to be for lowering blood pressure ("lower blood pressure" -- so far it's been 1.5 - 2 points higher for me!), (3) journaling for my fragile mind and soul, and (4) my carpe diem wheel of destiny: a quote, a song, a picture and/or gift for some online friend(s) I meet today. Who's invited to join? I must first enter the station and tie on some special "adorned" shoes. Believe me, it's going to be fun. Wear Patiences! TL:DR Or in a more commercial language: and don't worry, there's more in there than just the fear of sitting while having brain scans. I always promised a detailee of sorts, so that's what you got. So welcome back to where I can finally host the thing in my brain, post a few folks' names to my list, and -- sigh. You know what's important? - This describes exactly what I am doing right now. - "Times can only be kept running if they are keeping people together who agree to co-exist in a kind of civilized and law-abiding relationship." -- Algis Budrys, writer and editor, "Cyberpunk". - I would just like to say... I love this song, and I'm using it because I read an article in Popular Science magazine with the same title - if you know it, you know the feeling... once I do, it's hard to unpack the song metaphor (song metaphor?). - I'm worried. - I might have an iced coffee drink while this is going down. Whew. What you might not know about me/this is that I've suffered for most of my life from anxiety, panic attacks, agoraphobia, light sensitivity, claustrophobia and (the very worst) PTSD. Those are in addition to debilitating and sometimes debilitating depression. Now, I had the diagnosis of PTSD while in custody at Guantanamo Bay. The "escape" was detected and an intensive team effort was put in place to deal with me. Yes, the RDi is the real deal. That really could have helped me
