The three main characters of Fenimore Fillmore: The Westerner: John L. Tibbles, the American, Lydia Tibbles, his daughter, and the Curmudgeon Harry Tenpenny both have limited experience in life, but somehow are married to each other. An extensive amount of dialogue is handled using the excellent and innovative Interaction-Script technique developed by James Lipton and adapted by Sam Loyd for use with interactive fiction. While it would be best to stay away from the art style, the text is a fantasy adventure with no actual action that borrows liberally from TSR games by the name of Dungeons and Dragons. The epic scale of the game is comparable to the King's Quest series, but the settings and characters are quite different. The sophisticated and poetic art style is inspired by the treasure hunt game series of the 1980's. There are over 75 puzzle rooms and 8 subroutines for the characters and the Curmudgeon. Game Play: Room Screens: While Fenimore Fillmore has a lot of puzzles, it also has a lot of room screens. The rooms are the place you'll spend most of your time. The rooms themselves can be either oversized with a lot of interactive objects to be moved, broken, interacted with, and moved around to solve the puzzles. The rooms have an extremely well thought out design and many of them feel like they would be found in an old manor house with added adventure game elements and puzzles. Some of the rooms are larger than others but all of them are notable and have a lot of interesting puzzles to solve. While the rooms are very detailed, the visual element is very weak. The rooms don't have any depth but many of the colors match the character's personality and the backgrounds match the room. The art and coloring styles look more like 16-color poster art than a 3-D fantasy adventure game. The room's interactive objects are also well designed and usually mirror the real objects. The backgrounds seem real while also having some animation, and some rooms are literally whole screen puzzles. The rooms are not only a space to solve puzzles, but also to talk to the characters and characters to interact with. The puzzles are usually spread out over the room and the area around the room, so you have to actively search. The puzzles themselves are real adventure game puzzles while still being fun and fair. Even though the puzzles vary in difficulty, there are more difficult puzzles than the average interactive fiction game. The best part of Fenimore Fillmore: The Westerner: game

Delaware and L.J. Green are set to take a team that just made it to the NCAA Tournament to Ennis, Texas, where the Greyhound is expecting his fourth win this summer in the 2,700-meter National Cross Country Championships. To run the longest race in the event's history (the race will have 18 schools in 26 teams), the Greyhound plans to burn 400 to 500 calories each mile, about half of what most runners would use in a 10K. It's one of the reasons L.J. Green believes he was able to find the strength to get through the 16th mile of the NCAA Championships, when he ran the fastest time in the race. "That's going to be a key point at Ennis," Green said, "because I've always been afraid of high mileage, and this has a lot of miles in it so I'm hoping I can deal with it." It's a feeling of confidence that Green has been feeling all year, and it's something he attributes to the same advice first-year Head Coach Don Bowman told him to run his races as hard as he can. Green has settled into good times throughout his best three-week race so far, making adjustments based on feel and circumstance to get the best result in the NCAA Championships. He's started on the front row of the sectional championships to get comfortable under race conditions – not bad weather, but a fast course. "He's used to running on fast courses where you're not hitting as many splits," Bowman said. "I said you've got to run the race how you think it's going to go because the weather's gonna change, people's gonna run a little faster, you get taken out. He's got a good foundation. He's got a good head on his shoulders." To Green, it feels good to reach that point again. "Knowing what you can do and feeling confident gives you something. It's making it in the NCAA," Green said. "I felt confident at [the NCAAs] all year. That's not a typical thing for me. Usually my best races are out here where I have to battle for the first time and I don�
